Hi Philipp,

I am so excited to tell you about my trip to the Viking Museum in York. I went there with my family and my English friend Charlie. I usually don't like museums that much, but this one was brilliant. Most of the museum is underground, so you go down a lift and it's like a time machine where you end up in the year 900. That is when the Vikings were in York. The first thing I noticed was the strange smell. It smelled like in Viking times, which was ok for me, but my Mum didn't like it. Everyone could go on a little train, and it went through a Viking village that was set up there. The audio we listened to was really funny. It told you the story of a boy who lived in that village and who did a few naughty things. This was the kid's version. I think the adults listened to a different text, because me and Charlie always laughed and none of the adults did. Then there were some people in the museum dressed up as Vikings who showed you how the Vikings made swords or combs. You were even allowed to touch the things there and ask questions. I asked a question too, and I was really proud, because the "Viking" understood me.

I hope that you are having a great time as well in Hamburg. Maybe you went to a museum too? We want to go for a hike tomorrow. But if it rains again (like today), that's fine with me. We can go to the Viking Museum again. But it was quite expensive, so Mum and Dad probably don't want to.
